The Mississippi River Birding Trail consists of 30 bird watching sites in 13 Louisiana parishes. All its western end, within the Tunica Brown Line, the trail slings through the iron-bark bottomland hardwoods and cypress-tupelo swamps of the Lower Mississippi River Delta. Further east, the Audubon Loop circles into the grove of cypress-tupelo at the Mississippi River east bank. This is the only region of the state where the Eastern chipmunk and American ginseng live and grow and represents the supplemental extension of these two species’ Northern American distribution ranges. Finally, the trail continues higher up into the dry, high forested edges near its boundary with Southern Mississippi.

The Mississippi River Birding Trail consists of 30 bird watching sites in 13 Louisiana parishes.